“ My favorite memory of all time was in home economics. We were learning to sew and were making stich designs on pillow cases. You were holding yours in your lap while sewing and we were just gabbing away. When you went to set yours on the table it was completely stitched to your pant leg! Man the tears of laughter! I always teased you about that. My gosh i can't believe you're gone. I feel like I've lost a sister. You will forever be missed.

“ I have many many memories with you! So many stand out but this one was the funniest. You came to help me clean my house and was dusting when a spider fell from the chimney and you went running and screaming help me its got me. You swore it was a tarantula but it was a very large brown wood spider. You swore I planted it there and you was never coming back but if you did it was to burn the house down lol. Never forget that one. The biggest blessing was getting to be with you when you delivered Trevor! What a night! RIP Emily watch over us all!

“ Emily was one of a kind for sure. No matter what she would be there for anyone and try to help in anyway she could. I would not be married to my husband Jason if it wasn't for her. She introduced us. She was just like my sister, I was there when her 2 youngest sons were born. The love she had for all 4 of her kids was just amazing. Emily, you showed me overwhelming love when no one else would. I am going to miss the friendship we had. I love you so much sister.. Love, Kimberly and Jason Harris

“ When Emily was a baby me and my husband Larry took her and my son Brandon to see their very first drive-in movie and it was Teen Age Mutant Ninja Turtles III. On the way to the movie, they both fell asleep and we got there, the movie started and it startled them both awake and for 10 minutes we had two screaming toddlers so mad at us cause they did not know where they were at and they kept on crying until Michaelangelo came on and it was instant dry up tears and screaming and they both had to crawl over the seats to sit on our laps or I should say stand on them... lol and by the time we got done Larry and me were covered in popcorn, soda and toddler drool, not to mention the melted ice cream and that was the first time Emily hugged me and Larry and gave us a kiss. Then she politely leaned over and gave Brandon, the wet ice cream melted sloppy kiss on the cheek and the look on his face was priceless, and then she hit him...lol. We will never forget that night, ever!
